

MEPs are not obliged to give details of the expenses and allowance they claim or are reimbursed for. The Irish Examiner submitted an identical list of seven questions relating to the amounts claimed or refunded by each of our 11 elected representatives in Brussels.

While nine of the 11 responded, the level of detail differed and the answers were presented in various formats, for example some MEPs did not provide details for the six months of 2014 remaining in the year after they were elected, while others did.

The main allowance given is the general expenditure allowance which currently stands at €4,513 after incremental increases in the past five years. As no respondent said they had received less than the total or paid back any of this allowance the Irish Examiner calculated the maximum for each MEP. MEPs also currently get €320 every day they attend parliament, again this has been the subject of increases since 2014. While some MEPs gave exact figures, Brian Hayes, Seán Kelly, Mairéad McGuinness and Deirdre Clune provided estimates. The Examiner calculated their claims based on them attending three days for every week of business in Brussels and four days in the weeks parliament sat in Strasbourg.

Marian Harkin provided ballpark figures, which she explained and these explanations have been included in the main overview piece.

As Nessa Childers was returned to office in 2014, she provided figures for the entire 12 months and not just the six months of the new Parliament. It is important to note that some MEPs gave details of the amount claimed in the first half-year of their term in 2014 and also provided expenses to date. Others only provided information for the four full years, 2015 - 2018. In these cases the years are blank.
